Cora Baldry: a true sweetheart, always smiling, despite conditions

By Lori Copler Editor

Cora Baldry has some serious medical issues, but her family rejoices in her presence in their lives. She is the daughter of Nate and Mandy Baldry of Hutchinson, and one of the beneficiaries of this year's Tim Orth Foundation's Basketball Jamboree.

"Cora is a true sweetheart and always has a smile on her face," said her mom, Mandy. "She brings so much happiness to our family. Cora works so hard to reach her milestones. We're very proud of her."

Cora, 20 months old, was born with a genetic condition called craniofrontonasal dysplasia, a very rare condition.

Mandy Baldry said the family first learned that something was not quite right in her last month of pregnancy with Cora because of an anomaly in her amniotic

First, it was discovered that Cora's corpus callosum, the white matter that separates the two hemispheres of the brain, had failed to fully develop. The condition slows the development of certain motor skills and may cause poor vision and other impairments, and may delay such "milestones" as sitting, standing and walking.

Second, Cora had craniosynostosis, a condition in which the fibrous sutures in an infant's skull ossifies into bone, inhibiting the cranium's ability to grow correctly.

That can cause pressure on the brain, as well as create abnormal growth in the head.

Cora needed surgery to open up the sutures and ease the pressure in her skull. She will need surgery again May 7 as the sutures continue to "She'll probably have one or two more surgeries before she's 3," said Mandy.

Because of the anomalies in her skull, her brain is pushing her forehead forward, and the back of her head is somewhat slanted. However, surgeons should be able to reshape her head through a surgical procedure called cranial vault remodeling.

As Cora ages, she will likely see doctors every couple of months to evaluate her progress and to check whether the sutures have closed up again, and then hopefully every six months and then, eventually, just once a year.

"She's a little behind on her milestones," said Mandy, but making progress. "She isn't walking yet, but she cruises around the furniture pretty Cora has most of her care at Gillette Children's Hospital, but gets her physical and occupational therapy through Hutchinson Health. She also gets therapy at day care.

She has an older brother, Jackson, 14, "who is like her protector" but also does the typical big-brother teasing.

The family hopes that Cora will continue to make progress and grow into a typical teenager and young

Zack Eder was living the life of a typical American teenager when he was diagnosed with Ewing's Sarcoma last autumn. A winter's worth of chemotherapy and various treatments. His family is hopeful that the tumor on his scapula will be eradicated without the need for surgery.

Eder on the comeback trail

By Tom Carothers Sports Editor

Things were pretty normal for Zack Eder last autumn. He was living the normal, active life of a typical Cologne teenager and there wasn't a whole lot of worry when he first began experiencing muscle spasms in his shoulder.

When the spasms didn't at first subside, the Eders went to see the doctor and received some medication. However, when the spasms worsened after four days, a second trip to the doctor revealed a sinister cause - Zack had a tumor lodged in his scapula. Ewing's Sarcoma was the diagnosis.

"It was shocking," Zack said. "I wasn't expecting to be diagnosed with cancer in my Within days, Zack was being treated by an oncologist. Within two weeks, he was undergoing chemotherapy.

"It was awful," said Natalie Eder, Zack's mother. "Our lives were turned upside down. It took over our lives, everything else was on hold."

What followed was a winter's worth of chemotherapy, as well as some blood transfusions. However, Zack maintained his optimism throughout the ordeal.

"There's nothing you can really do other than to go with it," he said.

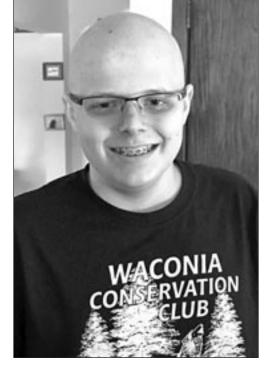

The results have been tremendously positive. Having just finished with six weeks of radiation treatments, Zack is feeling well after suffering with several bouts of extreme sickness.

"Things are going well now, I'm feeling pretty good," he said.

As for the tumor, there is much optimism that the treatments will eradicate the tumor and that surgery will not be necessary.

"It's amazing," Linda said. "15-20 years ago, they would have removed his scapula. Now, there is hope that he won't have to un-

Overcoming complications of premature birth — Draven

By Lori Copler Editor

Patrick and Bianca LeVasseur, like many married couples, have been looking forward to having their first child.

But Bianca's first two pregnancies didn't end well her first was a tubular pregnancy and was terminated, and the second ended with a miscarriage.

But then along came Draven, a son, who was born Nov. 14, 2014.

Unfortunately, Draven was born far too early, 17 weeks shy of his expected due date, and weighed just 1 pound, 10 ounces.

He's still hospitalized, but his weight is up to 6 pounds, 13 ounces, and he was weaned off a constant supply of oxygen three weeks ago. The couple hopes to bring him home this month.

Draven's progress has been remarkable considering all the issues that surrounded his premature birth - surgery was required when he was just two weeks old to repair a main artery to his heart, and he also had a hole repaired in his intestine.

'Now, he's pooping like normal," said his mother. Although it sounds funny, normal bowel movements are a huge stride forward for premature children.

Draven also developed brain bleeds and may have brain damage. There is a chance that he may develop cerebral palsy, Bianca said, but doctors won't be able to make that diagnosis for sure until he's at least 1 year old.

Draven will probably always develop at a slower rate than other children his age, Bianca said, and will require special help until he is at least 5 years old for physical therapy and developmental skills.

Bianca said she will be a stay-at-home mom to help her son.

But she also said she and Patrick have had lots of help. When the Tim Orth Foundation found out about Draven, it donated $500 to the family for gas money. Patrick and Bianca have rarely left Draven's bedside since his birth.

"Luckily, we've had a lot of people pulling for us, lots of loving care," said Bianca. "We have lots of family and friends who are helping us

Patrick and Bianca plan to attend Saturday night's Tim Orth Foundation Basketball

Jamboree, but are unsure if Draven will be able to join

The ultimate goal, Bianca said, is to get Draven home and settled in. The few hours they spend at home have been spent getting his room and home ready for him.

"It's been a long road," said Bianca said. "And we've been waiting for the end of that road to happen."

A world of her own: Audrey Cole, 5, lives with autism

By Lori Copler Editor

Rob and Darcy Cole of Hutchinson "knew something was going on" with their daughter, Audrey, by the time she was 18 months old.

"She wasn't pointing at things, using silverware; she wouldn't acknowledge us when we spoke to her," said Audrey's mom, Darcy.

The diagnosis: autism at the severe end of the spectrum

Now 5, Audrey still doesn't talk.

"She uses non-verbal communication, and her motor and behavioral skills aren't where they should be," said Darcy.

Audrey is in kindergarten at West Elementary in Hutchinson, and "spends 99 percent of her time in the special education room," said Darcy. Along with a teacher, Audrey has paraprofessionals who work with her, but "it's a challenge," said Darcy. "They (the staff) do the best they can."

Audrey also has attended a day treatment program for autistic children, and gets outpatient occupational therapy and speech therapy.

It's hard to measure progress, Darcy said, "because she can't tell you what she's feeling or thinking. So we haven't seen huge developments."

Darcy said there are a large number of therapies available for autistic children — from vitamin B-12 injections to gluten-free diets and more — but so far, nothing seems to help Audrey.

"There is a lot of research going on, but the autism spectrum is so wide that there will never be a treatment that fits every child. Every child is unique," said Darcy.

But like all parents, the Coles have hopes and dreams for Audrey.

"We really don't know what the future holds for her, but we hope she'll master the daily skills it will take for her

Future uncertain for Emma, battling inoperable brain tumor

By Lori Copler Editor

By all outward appearances, Emma Rose Olmscheid is a typical 2-year-old — bouncing around, exploring the world around her, teasing and being teased by her brothers.

But inside her head grows a tumor, taking up three-fourths of the space in her cranium. Emma, the daughter of Corey and Amanda Olmscheid, is from Hutchinson and one of the beneficiaries of this year's Tim Orth Foundation's Basketball Jamboree, set for Saturday in the Glencoe-Silver Lake High School gym.

And, sadly, the tumor is inoperable, a "spider web" of a tumor "that has entered everywhere in her brain," according to Emma's mother, Amanda.

When Emma started developing rashes on her face and started vomiting, her parents thought it was just one of the hundreds of things that afflict toddlers.

They took her to the emergency room which, in short order, referred them to Children's Hospital in the Twin Cities.

And then the seizures started, and doctors began testing her to find out why the seizures were occurring.

And the doctors did not have good news for the Olmscheids — Emma's tumor was large, and inoperable.

The Olmscheids did what most parents would do, sought a second opinion.

"Actually, we got five or six second opinions," said Amanda, "and they all told us the same thing."

The family's only option was chemotherapy to hopefully shrink the tumor, or at least stop it from growing.

It worked for awhile. Although the tumor didn't shrink, nor did it seem to be growing. With the exception of a couple to several seizures a day, Emma's life went on as usual.

"We've been surprised," said Amanda. "It (the tumor) doesn't seem to affect anything — her walking or anything. She's doing great under the circumstances."

But the last MRI showed that the tumor was, indeed, once again growing.

Amanda said she is not sure what the next step will be, if doctors will continue Emma on the same course of chemotherapy or start something stronger.

"The goal is to keep it stable, so that it's not growing in any way," said Amanda. "I'd be happy if it stopped right where it is now."

And the doctors prefer not to speculate on Emma's fu-

Welbes contends with Prolactinoma

Waconia's Eliana Welbes, pictured middle, was diagnosed with Prolactinoma. It is a condition where, by definition, a usually benign tumor in the brain's pituitary gland overproduces a hormone called prolactin.

According to the Mayo Clinic, this overproduction causes a decrease in estrogen, which can impair vision, cause infertility and other adverse side effects.

Kidney disease fails to slow down Emily Pedersen, 12

By Lori Copler Editor

Two years ago, Emily Pedersen's occasional bout of "not feeling right" and a fever seemed liked a virus or run-of-the-mill flu.

"It didn't really strike me that something was wrong," said Diane Pedersen, mother of the Hutchinson 12-yearold.

But then the fever would pop up in a regular threeweek cycle, and would last about four days.

"Suddenly, I realized the school nurse was calling me every three weeks, saying Emily was sick again," said Diane. After a third round of being called by the school nurse, Diane made an appointment with a pediatrician, who ran some tests. Emily's urine showed high levels of blood and protein.

The family was referred to Children's in the Twin Cities, which ruled out the first probable cause of Emily's illness — lupus.

But doctors did discover that scar tissue was forming on her kidneys, which inhibited their function.

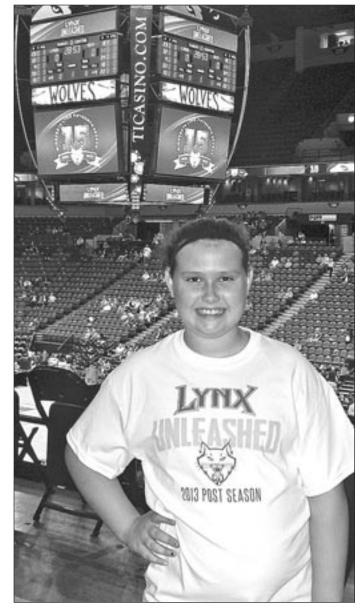

A biopsy in May 2014 failed to determine the cause of the scarring.

Since then, Emily's bouts of fever have subsided, but she still feels the effects of her scarred kidneys.

She's active in volleyball, softball and other activities, volunteers at the hospital and is in Girl Scouts, but sometimes has to curtail her participation when she gets headaches or tires out.

"She'll tell you that she feels fine 98 percent of the time," said Diane. "This is just part of her everyday

"They don't know, and they don't want to say," said Diane. "For now, we'll just keep monitoring her. This really hasn't stopped her. She's very involved, very active, and the goal is to let her stay that way."

ture, or what her life expectancy may be.

But the life expectancy question "is always eating at me," said Amanda. She did some research, and "what I find is five to 10 years, but the doctors can't really give me an answer."

Amanda said that family and friends have been a huge source of support for the family, in particular Corey's mother and grandmother. Corey's mother takes care of Emma when Amanda works.

"My husband's mom and grandma are the best helpers we could ever have, and Emma loves to go to Grandma's," said Amanda.

Emma will reach the one-year mark of her diagnosis in June, and the Olmscheids, of course, are hoping for many more Junes to come around.

Emma just seems to be living in the present, enjoying watching "Bubble Guppies" and "just being very sociable. She loves being around people," said her mother

Suffering and blessing

"...they rejoiced that they were considered worthy to suffer dishonor for the sake of the name." - Acts 5:41 As spring creeps into reality, we are reminded that "absence makes the heart grow fonder." Warm weather and green grass excite us because winter has deprived us of them. When something is lost, a new perspective is found.

This awareness touches the fringe of something even more significant ...the times that we suffer. While suffering may direct us to be inwardly directed and bitter, it also has the potential to direct us to greater openness and thanksgiving. Go figure. It is as if suffering awakens us to see what is important in life. Whether it be mild suffering or great suffering, the Holy Spirit has the ability to make it a spiritual exercise leading to thanksgiving.

After Jesus' suffering was seen as necessary for his victory, the New Testament witness is that his followers considered it an honor to suffer in his name. That's quite a different perspective than thinking a faithful life is one of blessing upon blessing. Blessing and suffering don't seem to belong in the same sentence in some people's view. Yet Jesus invitation was not to watch him suffer so we don't have to, but to pick up the cross and follow. God's call to follow, to serve, to love, and to care carries with it suffering.

Grant, Lord, that we may indeed suffering for your sake and instead of bitterness we may be given a thankful spirit.

Trailblazer struggling to find drivers

By Lori Copler Editor

Trailblazer Transit is struggling to find drivers for its expanded service, its joint powers board heard Thursday morning.

Executive Director Gary Ludwig said the system has a total of about 10 part-time and full-time slots to fill.

"There are concerns about salary," said Ludwig. "We were concerned about that coming into this (expanding into Wright County).'

Ludwig said Trailblazer bus drivers start at about $16 an hour.

He noted that overall, wages tend to be higher in Wright County because of its closer proximity to the metro area. Wages there tend to be higher than those offered for similar positions in McLeod and Sibley counties.

Jack Russek, a Delano City Council member who sits on the Trailblazer Joint Powers Board, said that the recovering economy has created a greater need for drivers.

"Everyone is looking for drivers right now," said Russek. "Schools, construction, everyone."

McLeod County Commissioner Doug Krueger agreed, saying that Trailblazer is trying to find drivers from a dwindling pool of available employees.

Ludwig said a round of interviews was set for Friday with candidates, and suggested that the joint powers board hold off a discussion on whether it should raise its wages until after those interviews.

"Let's just see how this plays out," said Ludwig, who noted that he was not asking for increased wages at this time, but just wanted the board to be aware of the situ-

Ludwig also said he feels there will be more applicants from Wright County once Trailblazer completes its building there.

"There will be more of a sense of permanency and presence once we get a building there," said Ludwig.

Ludwig also said that any salary increases would need to be approved by the Minnesota Department of Transportation (MnDOT), which provides a great deal of public transit's funding.

He suggested reviewing the topic again at the board's next meeting, set for May 21.

Biscay's bustling businesses

As you slow down to 30 miles an hour going through Biscay, try to imagine what this fine town was like 100 years ago. It is surrounded by rich farm land and was established in 1886 and named after the famous Bay of Biscay off the coast of France.

The Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad was a very busy depot on the route between Glencoe to Hutchinson. The 1930 census lists 275 people living here. The depot stood where the Neisen's Bar is now. F.A. Osmek was the railroad agent, express and telephone agent. Looking closely you can spot faint traces of the railroad bed on the southwest side of Highway 22 between Glencoe and Hutchinson.

The Biscay Co-operative Creamery Association, established in 1889, was the first cooperative creamery in the state of Minnesota and took state butter awards in 1938, 1939 and 1942 with its Biscay Premium Butter. In June 1889, the creamery paid 67 cents for 100 pounds of milk. One progressive farmer kept impeccable records and found he made a yearly profit of $26.17 per cow. It is reported that Henry Ulrich Sr. was one of the first farmers to believe in purebred cattle and at retirement age, sold one purebred animal, using the proceeds to buy a house. The creamery had as many as 200 patrons at one time but closed in 1969. The creamery and the 40-foot brick chimney still stand.

The State Bank of Biscay was located across Highway 22 from Neisen's Bar and is now a vacant lot. It was opened in 1909 and did a good business. The Depression forced the bank to close in 1933. It was soon turned into a thriving municipal liquor store. The Depression and Prohibition were over. "Happy Days Were Here Again!" The gigantic walkin-vault was used to store money and expensive bottles of liquor.

Oh, people had fun in that little establishment, lots of laughs by the locals and surrounding farmers.

Starting in the 1970s, energetic, friendly Everett Ernst and his wife managed it for many years. In the 1940s, Emil Zupfer and later John Raden had a barber shop in one corner.

Frank Bandas had a machinery dealership and later a general mercantile store which sold groceries, hardware and clothes. Frank's wife Josie was the head clerk. At other times Pechousek, Kuester, Kolar and a Peterson owned it. Then a very trusting Henke owned it. Just say "Charge it" or "Put-err Down," as he entered it into his tab book; you could pay for it later.

A.G. Lhotka sold hardware and stoves. A.W. Ohland sold Case tractors. Another man sold Massey Harris equipment. Martin Matousek had a blacksmith shop there starting in 1917. You could rent a room at the hotel for $1 a day.

The Biscay Flour Milling Company was owned by Jos. Burich and Jos. Monroe and later by Frank Bandas. They sold Biscay XXXX Patent Flour. They could get 34 pounds of flour out of one bushel (60 pounds) of wheat.

Steinkopf & Neilson owned the grain elevator. A stockyards adjoined the railroad tracks.

Burdorf's gas station at Biscay Oil was a busy place. He also delivered to farms. Henry Bartel and then Vern Nelson operated a car and tractor repair up until approximately 1970. In the very early days, Fritz's Place had a pool hall and a bowling alley. A Fourth of July parade marched down Main Street for many years.

The Biscay Post Office was established in 1889 and was first located in the elevator office. John Kennedy was the first postmaster. After several Kennedy postmasters, Frank Osmek was appointed postmaster in 1917 with offices located in several places, including the porch of his house.

The Biscay Hall still looks in fine shape from the outside even today. The inside is questionable. It was once filled with many activities, dances, home talent plays and comedy skits put on by the Community Club and threeact live plays put on by the Biscay Dramatic Club with music by the Biscay Orchestra. Admission was 75 cents to see "Turn to the Right" play and many others.

Free movies were shown on Friday nights during the summertime. Kids would get very excited about attending. The screen was a huge sheet tied to two telephone poles with flat benches to sit on. During western movies the stage coach wheels turned backwards.

In the 1940s, Art and Bessie Benkowski started a little bar and restaurant in their house located right on Highway 22. The house dining room had room for about five standing customers and their living room had three booths and three small tables. Bessie served delicious home-cooked noon lunches for 75 cents.

A huge modern 2-story brick school house with several rooms was built. The McLeod County Historical Museum was located in it for a few years starting in 1980. Now it is a private residence.

The neat St. John's Lutheran Church located 21/2 miles southwest of Biscay is still active and has a delicious ice cream social every year. The well-groomed cemetery has many familiar names of German and Czech descent.

County to check into shop problems

By Dave Pedersen Correspondent

In order to get "peace of mind" the McLeod County Board of Commissioners voted to hire Braun Intertec to perform an onsite building evaluation of the highway shop near Silver Lake at a cost of about $7,788, but not to exceed $10,000.

The decision was made at the meeting on March 17 after Highway Engineer John Brunkhorst gave an update on the SLATS highway shop (Silver Lake/Lester Prairie Transportation Services) that started operation in June

The structure is experiencing some concrete floor cracking issues as well as other construction issues that include condensation, water dripping, high humidity and cold drafts.

The total cost for construction to date is $1.22 million and engineering costs run $82,066 One thing left to do this summer is plant trees and shrubs, costing between $5,000 and $7,000.

Brunkhorst said the concrete floor shrinking and cracking is an issue of longterm durability. The same is true for the metal building with concern of workmanship for long-term durability and maintenance.

"We are getting rust on our vehicles and on metal sheeting," added Brunkhorst. "We should not have the cracks we have now. We want to have a site that is there 50 to 60 years."

Commissioner Ron Shimanski asked if the problem could be due to site preparation. Brunkhorst did not think so, adding a big factor could be that when the concrete was poured the humidity dropped and a cold front came through.

Commissioner Sheldon Nies asked if issues are found, who pays for the repairs. Brunkhorst said the county can use the warranty with RAM General Contracting and the bond company. Plus the county is withholding a small amount of pay-Brunkhorst has been in discussion with RAM, which thinks the cracking may be from the type of equipment the county has there. When snow melts off there is extra moisture in the building.

'We think there is an issue with how the vapor barrier was installed," said Brunkhorst. "This evaluation would include going on the roof to see how it is put together. Every time we look a little more we find something else. RAM has been responsive when we find stuff, but we keep finding stuff. In hindsight, we could have had an onsite project inspector throughout the whole project, but we elected to go the route of having the contractor do it. The project manager is no longer with the company."

Commissioner Paul Wright said, "If we inspect this facility we will know where we are at and not wait 10 years down the road and wished we had done this step. In order to have leverage for any repairs or corrections, we should spend the money to have these issues documented."

Brunkhorst added, "We don't want to pay for it down the road if we can get it paid for up front by the contrac-

The board started the facility process with a cost estimate study in 2011, followed by a site study in 2012 and awarded the bid to RAM General Contracting in July
